Imposing a Moratorium on the Number of Federal Judges sired workload for a district judge is no more than 400 weighted l-ings per year and for a circuit judge, a benchmark of 255 merits dis-8 positions. The Conference considers more than these standards in 9 A 1993 General developing judgeship recommendations, however. Accounting Ofce report characterized as reasonable the Conferences method of developing judgeship recommendations, while recognizing limitations in the Conferences workload mea-sures and the judgmental nature of much of the Conferences de-10 cisionmaking. Of course, Congress is under no obligation to adopt the Judicial Conference recommendations, and it occasionally provides more or fewer judgeships and for different courts than those recom-11 mended by the Conference. Finally, Congress sometimes creates temporary judgeships to meet caseload pressures regarded as temporary. The judgeship is temporary in that a future vacancy (e. g. , the rst occurring after ve years) will not be lled. The temporary judgeship thus creates 12 no permanent increase in the courts authorized judgeships. the creation of the Resources Committee, the Court Administration Committee and its Statistics Subcommittee developed judgeship proposals. 8. Weighted lings is a statistical construct that adjusts the number of raw district court lings in light of the relative burden that different types of cases im-pose on judges. Those relative burdens are in turn based on time studies that the Federal Judicial Center conducts for the Statistics Subcommittee. The merits dis-positions figure for appellate courts is a rough measure of dispositions by judicial action. 9. The Statistics Subcommittee also consults with...
